

SS flirts with perfection in week 2

Membership thrives; CM never gets tired of the penthouse

Effective date: 2020-09-23

In a week that saw most everyone post strong numbers in the win column, none was stronger than SS, who was just 1 win shy of boasting a feat many pickers only dream of and that is the ever elusive perfect week. As Sunday came and went, SS found himself without a blemish heading into a MNF game that, if played in 2015 would have surely meant certain victory. Unfortunately for SS this is not 2015...Drew Brees is no spring pup and apparently Las Vegas means something to these Raiders as they were able to take care of business, leaving SS with nothing short of an amazing 15-1 performance on the week. Very well played SS!! Spotlight shined on more than just one member in week 2 however, as CM and KS demand some respect on their initials with their 14 win weeks and LF and DP just behind them with a modest 13 wins a piece to round out the top performances. Well done to those mentioned and a tip of the cap to all members that locked in their picks this week, as everyone that did saw success in the form of double-digit victories. This is what we live for!

Week 2 saw 3 loners taken, MM took the Washington Monuments but they couldn't take down Kyler Murray and his hot ARZ team; and our friend MS left nothing to be desired after CAR couldn't overtake TB and NE got too Cam happy on the goal-line leaving him bitter and O'fer on his attempts. Better luck next time boys!

Finally, as we glance back at week 2 and all the strong performances, we notice movement at the top and realize that perhaps CM hasn't returned his penthouse keys to the leasing office. There he sits for now, but with many strong suitors perusing the property, we will see how long CM can afford the rent... Week 3 should be fun!

Still Pimpin'

LF